

Work Geometry

Table & Chair Pairing Guide

Work Geometry is HNI's human-centric consideration of posture, fit, and tools to create comfortable furniture for how people actually work.

HNI believes that one common thread informs our product design philosophy; furniture needs to solve a work problem while supporting a wide range of different activities.

Whether you are designing for an individual focus area, small informal collaboration space, or large conference room, this tool will help guide you to some suggested pairings of tables and seating. Choose your table height to browse options and featured pairings to accommodate a variety of postures and settings.

Continental Tables	04
Standard Tables	08
Counter Tables	21

Bar Tables	26
Product Index	37

Although task and conference seating can be paired with many of these scenarios, this document is highlighting non-adjustable options.

Continental height tables are lower than standard height, meaning they are great for discussions that are more informal with relaxed postures. For more casual or intimate conversations with people in positions of trust, consider smaller table sizes.

Counter height tables are comfortable for both standing and sitting with a proper stool. These heights offer a great option to introduce posture variety into meetings. Gatherings of various sizes can be casual or formal, and power access is important for tech. A footrest on the table or stool encourages perching, leaning, or fidgeting movement for comfort. Consider a higher stool back for support during longer conversations or meals.

For quick, casual conversations, a bar height table provides a place to pause, lean, and chat. It can be the perfect place for impromptu brainstorming or brief, productive standing meetings. Consider a lower stool back that can be tucked under the table and declutter the visual landscape. A footrest on the table or stool provides comfort and makes it easy to adjust postures.
